Allermuir

A quiet confidence in comfort and form

Built on the union of design simplicity and technical precision, Aldo delivers exceptional ergonomic comfort in a timeless everywhere collection. Designed to transition effortlessly across dining, café, and meeting spaces, Aldo chairs and stools harmonize with any interior design aesthetic.

Fine-tuned details

Soft, rounded wood forms pair with high-gloss powder coated frames to create striking material contrast with a calm visual presence. Tubular steel legs attach seamlessly to the back with no visible hardware, while a graceful ribbon-shaped substructure frames the seat. This flexible family of seating is a true testament to the power of nurturing the details.

Design by John Tree

John Tree is an award-winning, London-based designer who combines a rigorous approach to manufacturing with a sensitive use of detail, materials, and proportion.

Working with a reductive approach, his practice explores beauty through economy. Stripping away the unnecessary, his projects combine an intelligent simplicity with a clarity of purpose.

“My work is minimal but not forced. I try to let the function lead the form and material choice until a design feels natural. Often the outcome combines a visual familiarity with a fresh simplicity.”

Tree’s esteemed background spans a 20-year tenure at Jasper Morrison’s studio, followed by Sony Design, informing his highly technical design style and strong connection to the fabrication process. Tree began his own practice in 2016 and has created innovative, award-winning furniture, lighting, and electronic products for notable brands such as Hydro, Muuto, NaughtOne, HAY, and Motorola. Industry leading publications have featured many of Tree’s projects as well as select designs have been inducted into the permanent collection of MoMA.

The Aldo Collection marks the first collaboration between Allermuir and John Tree.
